

Brief Biographical Sketch

Lawrence M. Gibbs, CIH
Chair, ACGIH®
Associate Vice Provost for EH&S
Stanford University

Larry Gibbs is Chairman of the ACGIH®, a professional membership association whose core purpose is to advance occupational and environmental health.

In his day job, Larry is Associate Vice-Provost for Environmental Health and Safety at Stanford University, where he is responsible for health, safety, and environmental risk management programs, institutional emergency management and risk communication. Larry is also a lecturer in occupational safety and health at the Stanford Institute for the Environment. Mr. Gibbs is a certified industrial hygienist with over 25 years of experience in developing, implementing and managing safety, health and environmental programs for academic, research and clinical institutions.

In addition to his work at various universities, he serves as a consultant for industrial, pharmaceutical, biotechnology and government organizations. He has authored over 25 publications on health, safety and environmental management, and co-authored two books. In addition to his leadership role on the ACGIH Board, he is also on the Board of Directors of the National Association of Environmental Managers (NAEM), is active in the AIHA and with the Campus Safety Health and Environmental Management Association.